Q7 - Are there other important information about your preferences on teaching schedule that you would like to share?

Are there other important information about your preferences on teaching sc...

some profs are scheduled to teach 3-unit courses while others are scheduled for 4-unit courses... so some professors have a more demanding teaching schedule than others (two additional hours of teaching per week) only 10 minutes between classes is not enough some courses require significantly more one-on-one time with students outside of class than others

Faculty teaching in Fertitta have no dedicated location for student meetings, etc. when classes are not back-to-back.

2 days per week maximum--could be any 2 days except Monday and Friday

Many classes are now taught in 1.5 units in a 8 week schedule, on weekends, online or one day a week that can also impact value of a given schedule.

I think the scheduling people do an amazing job.

BACK TO BACK SESSIONS IN SAME CLASSROOM

It sounds interesting. Good luck! Murat

I happen to prefer to have breaks between classes to fit in office hours on the same day as teaching. You didn't have Fridays as an option - undergrad classes do meet on Fridays. I have taught on Fridays consistently until these last two semesters and love having that extra day "off". If it weren't for Fridays "off", I would prefer to not teach on Mondays to enjoy the occasional 3-day weekend. I absolutely HATE teaching after 6 pm - I have an 8 pm lecture for a core undergrad class this term on Thursdays (!) and students really don't want to bet there. I'm able to rally (extrovert!) but by 9:30 pm they are nodding off - especially during midterm time when they are exhausted.

Depending on how far you commute into USC, teaching before 10 am may be impossible if you have to drop off your kids at school or day care in the morning. The evening hours are easier to manage than morning hours.

Single prep, multiple sections.

I need to teach the CFO class beginning at 8:00 a.m. so I can accommodate the schedules of CFOs that visit the class.

Same room/very close room when back to back

Semester (Fall vs. Spring) would also be important.

I prefer to teach during the fall if possible.

Schedule so that in fall semesters I miss only 1 day for Jewish holy days and in spring try to avoid having to miss a class due to Passover.

Told in advance

Question above about teaching times does not respond. I no longer want to teach in the evenings. Prefer M/W over T/Th

When teaching back to back classes, it is nice to stay in the same classroom (not having to move to a different classroom)

1. all teaching in single semester 2. could potentially do earlier in morning, or later in afternoon, but not both. (have to be available for carpool duty on one end of the day!) 3. if teach at "undesirable" time, would like enrollment considered based on that. e.g., if teach 8 am because of lack of availability of other more desirable time slots, would expect lower enrollment and would not like that to reflect negatively on the course offered.

The semester system (15 weeks) is awful. It should be quarters. The requirement of teaching undergrad classes twice a week (as opposed to being one 3-hour block) is awful. Conditional on meeting twice a week, the fact that the teaching days cannot be consecutive (e.g., Mon-Tue) is awful.

Teach in JFF LL105 rather than Edison Auditorium

What about question about student centric education?

I like back to back classes in the evening :)

Would much prefer to have consecutive classes in the same room.

If one lives very far away (> 60 miles away) and takes public transportation to get to campus, teaching schedule preference is of extreme importance.

I like teaching 8am, 10am and then at 2pm. I need the lunch break for meetings.

The trick in answering this question is that my preferences depend on what is best for students. I prefer my classes to be offered with a schedule that is best for student learning. It is not about maximizing my personal convenience.

No, thanks

I have a strong preference to teach after 2pm.
